BACKGROUND:

Massachusetts General Law, Chapter 40 § 8G permits cities and towns to enter into “Mutual Aid Agreements,” for the primary purpose of assisting each respective municipality in protecting the lives, safety, and property of the public, when existing resources are not sufficient to do so.

A city or town, which accepts Chapter 40 § 8G, may enter into an agreement with another city or town, to institute mutual aid programs for police departments, and thus augment the capability and effectiveness of each law enforcement agency in the protection of life, property, and safety of the citizens within the territorial area governed by the agreement. The Town of Medfield has accepted Chapter 40 § 8G.

In order to understand mutual aid the officers of the Department must also understand the boundaries of their own jurisdiction.

The mutual aid agreement may include the furnishing of personnel services, supplies, materials, contractual services, and equipment, when the resources normally available to any municipality in the agreement, are not adequate to cope with a situation requiring police action.

When providing such mutual aid, police officers shall have all the immunities and powers granted to them in the municipalities which employ them, including but not limited to, powers of arrest. In order to understand mutual aid the officers of the department must also understand the boundaries of their own jurisdiction.
